BIOGRAPHY

ANR is a preeminent Author whose professional career began back in 2020 after her first published work, The Butterfly Project was released, but she's been writing since 2017.

Since then, she's explored different writing genres and created a loyal group of fans who eagerly await her latest releases. With numerous bestsellers and awards to her name, ANR continues to push literary boundaries.

Coming from Lawrence County, Ohio, ANR published her first book just a week before her fifteenth birthday. Coming from a family of writers, her grandfather being the author of multiple published books, her mother is a freelance writer for their local newspaper, being a writer is just in her blood. She has three younger sisters and two older brothers and currently lives on a homestead in Ohio, raising their six chickens, one rooster, two dogs, five rabbits, and one cat.

BIOGRAPHY

ANR has been volunteering at the Lawrence County Museum since she was twelve years old and does beauty pageants in her free time.

In 2017 ANR was diagnosed with depression and anxiety, both of these conditions only worsened up until the age of fifteen, where she found her outlet. As shown in some of her poetry, ANR struggles daily with her mental health and tries to portray that in her writing. She runs a mental health blog and is fixed on helping others through her work. This is why all of her poetry books are completely free, alongside the resources she has to offer.

Tell us about your upcoming book.

What inspires you most?

Answers

My latest book is a poetry collection of spoken word poetry, covering a variety of topics. It's for light reading.

My upcoming book is called If I Hadn't Held My Breath, and it's the largest poetry collection I've ever written. It's about betrayal and heartbreak.

My sisters; everything I do is for them.

INTERVIEW QUESTIONS

Questions

Is writing your full-time career? Or would you like it to be?

Which of your books is your personal favorite?

You've written poetry and romance. Do you have a preference?

What is the most surprising thing you discovered while writing your book(s)?

Answers

It's not a full-time career yet, but I would like it to be.

Girl of Puzzles, or The Last Train, it's a tie.

I prefer to write romance, but poetry is good therapy for me.

That I suck at spelling.

REVIEWS

As I read through this collection of poems, I had an emotional response. I felt sadness for what they were experiencing, I also felt hopeful and encouraged. The poems made me reflect on my life experience and relive memories I did not think were so close to the surface. These are great poems worth reading several times. It definitely has a place in my poetry collection.

Butterfly Project

You're a young poet who clearly has either a lot of life experience or possesses excellent imagination. A lot of the book is quite dark and hard-hitting, but I really appreciate your narrative poems. They're my favorite poetry form.

Sophie Bowns, proud customer, on The Butterfly Project

Perfection. A masterpiece of literature, the author knows how to make the reader fully relate to the character in a deep and meaningful way. A definite recommendation to fellow book lovers!

GIRL OF PUZZLES

EXCERPT

“There will come a time,” She whimpered.
“When you don’t want me anymore.” Bonnie had only had two boyfriends in the past, one moved, but even she knew he only dated her because he felt bad for her. And the other had broken up with her, didn’t want her, dating a blind girl was too difficult.

She felt Henry shake his head, and even his brown eyes filled up with tears. He couldn’t believe Bonnie would even think that. He couldn’t imagine not wanting to be around her. Meeting her and getting to know her and being her friend, was... fun. She was fun, and funny, and could brighten your day in an instant.

“I don’t think so, Bonnie.” He said.

THE BUTTERFLY PROJECT

EXCERPT

I wanted to talk about it,
I wanted to scream from the rooftops,
I wanted people to know,
that I felt I'd been abandoned by God.

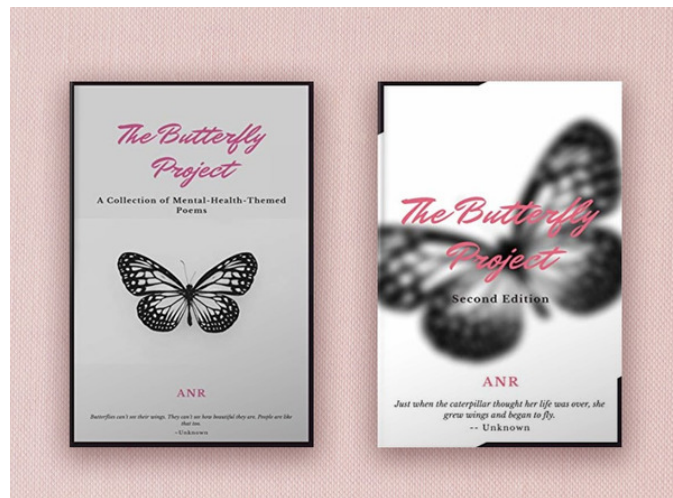

When they asked how I was,
I wanted to tell the truth,
I wanted to shout it at them.

But at the end of the day, when they asked how I was,
all I could do,
is whisper,
"I'm fine."
